AGA KHAN UNIVERSITY
HOSPITAL
KARACHI, PAKISTAN

ABSTRACT TOPIC

Our world today is a time of high technology with rapid advancement in information flow and delivery that affects our lives every second.

This constant information that we are subjected to on a daily basis from social media and other sources places a stress on our brains which are not designed for this volume of constant data flow.

We would like to address this challenge to see if behavioural modification strategies in context of neuroscience and psychology in this high-tech world can help to better prepare our 'Primitive Brain' for this constant information era that we live in.
